►Main features: the following components: A story with a plot in a magnificent scientific experiment inspired by actual events; The character background: personality, history, parents, friends; The character's equipment: skills, units, items; The system of weapons and units: to select and create a strategy; To develop a character and change strategies in real-time. ► Game Play: Players will create their own side in a war for the future of the world. They will have to take the lead in the defense and research of a space station against an enemy who wants to destroy the station and use its technology to take over the Earth. Many different units will be used to penetrate and defend the space station: - Fighters: to break through the weakest points in the defense of the enemy; - Rockets: to attack the enemy space station or take over it; - Men: to strike the enemy; - Armaments: to destroy the enemy units. At the beginning of each game, players will receive a defense station with all units and weapons, and will have to create a strategy for them to combat the enemy. In "Cyber Noah" from the very beginning, players can create a character with free will, or play against them as a human player. Player interaction with the game world: • create a character: that means to choose a gender, name, and background; • change the character's equipment and characteristics; • pursue a path of development in real-time. General characteristics of the game: • arcade style: simple controls, intuitive gameplay, which allow you to enjoy an immersive story; • role-play game: full freedom of movement, choices, events, dialogues, battles; • management of equipment, modification of the appearance of the character; • rich game environments: graphics, cutscenes, sound; • active game story with the player's immersion; • suitable for beginners and experts. ► Modes of game play: The Main Mode: In it, players create a character with free will, or play against them as a human player. The Arcade Mode: It takes place on a pre-created world and provides the player with the opportunity to complete each mission without the influence of the story. The player must perform tactical moves that will influence the outcome of the game. It is recommended for players who plan to understand and practice all the characteristics of the game. Story Mode

What's new:

I've enjoyed coding since I was about eight. My first website was a click-bait news site that could tell you in plain English about which countries were at war. When only one of them actually was, I was given an A+ for Excellence in Technographics, or so it was then said. The browser had a fifth button on the arrow keys but no right arrow key. Because eighth grade programmers at our school were training the computer to recognize it, you can't read this site. My grades went from being A+ to straight F once Click-Bait was dead. Flash died, Java was tried, and Microsoft tried Unicode so the human language can be coded. It failed. Software from the nineties remained the only way to build websites. You didn't just build a webpage, you built an entire website. This provided everything. News, video, music, documents, marketing, you name it. Everything was done by a web developer. You had to make sure the browser would read the HTML code and any scripts, you had to make sure that the server would serve web pages, you had to learn CMSs, hosting, AJAX, Backbone, you name it. The web development world is still one dominated by developer culture. The user experience remains control by only one person. This is about control. It isn't about giving users control, it's about giving one person control. It isn't about giving developers control, it's about taking that control away from them and it isn't about opening up the web, it's about closing it down. The pace of development has slowed. Our view of the world has simplified. Instead of interacting with complex systems, we force their simplicity through screen commands. Instead of interacting with context, we drag around toys designed to hide the screen. Layers have been stripped down. If a word processing app like Microsoft Word includes a bracket fill feature in 2019, we barely see it as a feature. Mainframes are not just obsolete, we simply neglect them for an operating system and an application that work. Because they do have one thing in common, they can only be used by a single person. Newer developers learn a framework, whether it be jQuery, React, Angular, Vue or any other Javascript framework, no problem. They learn JavaScript, and a whole bunch of libraries
