Family Gathers Around Newborn Baby They Found Abandoned On Public Bus When an abandoned newborn found in a Metro North New Haven bus stop was finally discovered, the family that had given the child up to strangers rushed to save it. Images of the smiling baby and its well-dressed parents were shared all over social media. While many people let their compassion for the child run wild, some claimed the family should be charged with child abandonment. "I think it's wonderful that she was found safe and sound with her family," CBN News contributor, Gabrielle Ballas, said. "It's quite a coincidence, but it's probably God's doing and it's reassuring for all of us." For those looking for answers, there are still few details known about the newborn's identity. "So far we know she's healthy," Ballas said. "They were just trying to make sure they found the right baby." A woman who stopped on the day she was supposed to work at the bus stop said she saw an adult male lying down and watching the baby as if he was in deep thought. The woman said she guessed he was the baby's father. The baby's father reportedly took off running when he realized he'd been spotted. The Rangers Plan To Stick With Their Phil Dericksen for The Edge of Glory Phil Dericksen will return for the season-opener of the 2014 Edge of Glory. The UFL will fill in Dericksen for Drew Fickett in the game, according to a source with the league. "We have no choice," the source said. "He came out of Friday with the ankle injury and they need a viable option for that game. "We're not against this happening. We thought last year about doing this, but with Dericksen getting hurt (during the final week of the regular season and suffering an ankle injury), we didn't have anyone ready for that game."
